
An online video game company is creating an adult PC game with cartoon-like graphics. The company, Nutaku.net, has announced that their new game will be available on Steam and other distribution platforms later this year. The game will be called Traceroute and is described as a selfie-driven adventure game where the player travels across the world to meet sexy female bounty hunters in order to collect evidence of all kinds of criminal activity. The game is developed by Dharker Studio, the same company that developed "Norn9". A promotional video for Traceroute posted on YouTube shows three different scenes, one each in Paris, Rio de Janeiro, and Tokyo. The game will be available for free download on PC. Players will also be able to purchase individual girls for $15 each or a season pass containing all nine girls for $25. The characters are based on the artwork of popular Japanese illustrator Saruwatari Makoto who has worked on more than 50 titles including "Dead or Alive Xtreme 3" and the Touhou Project series of visual novels. To help promote the game, Nutaku.net has partnered with adult game review website XCritc to create a series of videos on YouTube. The first video was released on June 14, 2018, and features an interview with Dharker Studio's Head of Marketing, Bryan Grosnick. As of August 2018, the video has over 45,000 views. Released just weeks after XCritc's review of Traceroute, Dharker Studio is already hard at work on the game's first free content update which is expected to be launched some time this month. It will include a new character named Misty and a mini-game where players can earn special items by helping her find her missing bikini top. Nutaku.net plans to launch the game officially in October 2018. "The game will be available on Steam and other distribution platforms later this year. The game will be called Traceroute and is described as a selfie-driven adventure game where the player travels across the world to meet sexy female bounty hunters in order to collect evidence of all kinds of criminal activity." Specifics about the content available for download have not yet been released, but Nutaku appears to have taken advantage of a recent Federal Court decision that allowed Valve Corporation, the developer behind both the Steam platform for video games and digital video streaming service Twitch, to block access to sexually explicit material. Tom Eeles, legal counsel for Nutaku states that "Traceroute" does not contain any sexual or violent content.
